

Renewables Integration Conference

Supporting Renewable Systems through Energy Storage and Dynamic Grid Management

November 19-20, 2019 • Palm Springs, CA

OVERVIEW

Renewable energy sources (RES), such as wind and solar, are growing rapidly. However, their intermittency and non-dispatchability are causing significant issues for the generation, transmission, and distribution systems, including errors in load forecasting, voltage spikes, frequency excursions, and cyclic operation of thermal plants. Energy storage technology options, performance, and costs are improving to better support wide-scale RES integration while also managing these associated issues. Furthermore, modern inverters are minimizing the momentary cessation interval, and improvements in resource availability forecasting and system modeling are enabling better planning and operation of the grid.

This conference will focus on emerging technology and software solutions for modern grid operations with increasing penetration of RES. Heavy emphasis will be placed on energy storage integrated with RES, the economics of RES on both a standalone basis and when combined with energy storage, improved smart inverters and controls, and transmission and distribution system optimization. The technology capability and value proposition of each solution will be deliberated.

THEMES

1. Modeling and Forecasting for Scenario Planning
2. Impacts on Grid Operations and Reliability
3. Technologies and Applications for Mitigating Grid Impacts

WHO SHOULD ATTEND?

- Electric Utilities
- Consultant
- Equipment Vendors
- Research Facilities and Laboratories
- Academics

This conference is created with the help of our utility members:
